Reflective Practice from Greenwood Dictionary of Education

A concept introduced by Donald Schön in 1983. In reflective practice, a person learns by looking at their past experiences and the successes, failures, outcomes, thoughts, emotions, individuals, and events that surround the experiences. The process may be facilitated by another who has competency in the area being reflected on and is meant to help the learner improve by reflecting on what happened in the past. A teacher/practitioner engages in continual assessment of the improvement of practice by examining and analyzing actions, motives, student outcomes, and education policies.
